Juggler in Training

One night at supper Jennifer announced, "I want to learn how to juggle. I brought home a book from the library that shows me how to start juggling. I need to make some balls out of rolled up socks to practice with. Is that okay, mother?" "Sure." mother replied. "But don't practice in the apartment. You might damage something. Practice in the hallway but don't bother anybody." The next day Jennifer turned some of her big brother's white cotton socks inside themselves to make fluffy soft balls. Once out in the hallway, she tried the first lesson in the how to juggle book. It said to put the ball on her head, nod her head gently forward and catch the ball in her hands. She did that a few times, then tilted her head backwards and tried to catch the ball with her hands behind her back the way the book said. "That was easy enough," she said to herself. "I'll try the next lesson." The next lesson seemed pretty simple too. Jennifer placed the soft sock in her right hand. She tossed it straight up higher than her head like the lesson said, clapped her hands once, but missed catching the ball with her left hand. She tried several times but only could catch the ball once in a while. Discouraged, she went inside her apartment. "Did you have fun?" her mother asked. "It was okay." replied Jennifer. "But I didn't do very well on the second lesson so I quit." "Well, it's way too early to quit, Jennifer. Today was your first day. If you practice more tomorrow, I am sure you will figure it out. It takes time to learn something new."
